Letting Go!

Why do we let go?

- We are biologically wired and created to long for independence
- Parents moving over makes room for a other intimate relationships
- Children leaving home is a crucial step in the child's development into an adult
- Western Cultures lack a ritual to mark the change or the shift from child to adult. Leaving home for college can be that ritual
- Your student needs to know that you believe they can leave home and survive

Why is it hard to let go?

- We love our children. We want things we love to be close to us
- It's also joyful to watch our children turn into the people they were designed to be
- Children are a gift from God and we want to be close to those we love
- Fear of the new role. You will move from parent to more of a consultant
- Fear that they want need us as much
- Fear that the big bad world might hurt
- Grief about this phase of parenting being over
- You are now parenting an adult, not a child

What can I do?

- Remind yourself that this transition is hard. Cry if you need to
- This is a process that takes time. Transitioning is part of entering into a new season of life
  - You have been preparing for this from the beginning. Was your goal for your child to never leave home? Would your child be her/his best self if they stayed at home with you forever?
  - Being here today is preparing you for this change

What can I do?

- Find others going through the same transition
- If you are dreading August, plan something fun to do in August. Give yourself something to look forward to outside of your child
- If you find yourself sad for longer than couple of weeks, seek counsel in a good therapist

Things to Do with Your Student/Child To Prepare for the Leave

- Be honest about how hard this is without blaming or making your child feel responsible
- Set-up a communication plan now
- How often do you expect to hear from them during the week (please note I did not say how often do you expect to hear from them a day)
- Discuss the plan for if you are unable to reach them. What is a reasonable amount of time to wait for a response?
Who will you call before you alert campus security?

Things to Do with Your Student/Child To Prepare for the Leave

- This is a good time to be honest about how hearing from them will let you know that they are safe.
- Don't expect lengthy conversations daily. You want them to build intimate relationships with other people.
- If you are really missing them, write a letter than you can mail to them or give to them after they graduate.

Things to Do with Your Student/Child To Prepare for the Leave

- Discuss things like money, a budget, and expectations about grades, etc. NOW
  - Are they able to wake themselves up?
- The newness of school wears off by late September/early October. You will not be cast aside forever but you do want to give them the space to fully experience going to college!
